AN ENEMY IN CAMP.

IS UREY WOODSON, CHAIRMAN OF THE 2D DISTRICT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,

Interested in the Scheme to Start a Republican Newspaper?

Yesterday afternoon, just as the last rays of the setting sun gilded the face of the Court-house clock, and the shadow of the hour hand fell on the figure VI, two gentlemen crossed over from the Planter's House corner, and proceeded stealthily along South Court square towards St. Ann street. One was a small person, with a superabundance of hair and a peculiar ambling gait, that we often see affected by those who love the night time. The other was a gentleman of more Corbett-like proportions, and seemed, from his occasional gesticulations, evidently of remembrance, to be averse to some deep-laid scheme which was being nurtured by his companion. Arriving at the corner of Third and St. Ann streets, the pair cast furtive glances around for a second, then hurriedly entered the floor of a small frame building, occupied as a printing office, by the Rural Home Journal, of which Mr. R. Benson is the editor.

The smaller of the two persons was Mr. Urey Woodson, editor of the Owensboro Messenger, member of the State Executive committee, Chairman of the Second District Democratic committee and State Railroad commissioner. The other was Mr. George E. Bridges, business manager of the Messenger. Shortly after entering the office of the Home Journal, Mr. Bridges retired, and Mr. Woodson stated to Mr. Benson the object of his visit.

He began by saying that certain parties were going to start a Republican newspaper in Owensboro, to be run until after the election in the interest of Dr. Kimbley, the Republican candidate for Congress. That being the editor of a Democratic paper he (Woodson) didn't care to have the Republican paper issued from his office, but, as he (Benson) was from the North, that perhaps he was a Republican, and wouldn't object to arranging for its publication. He told Benson that if he didn't want to edit, that there were plenty of "fine writers" ready to do that, and that he (Benson) could act as business manager.

Mr. Benson, who didn't require a telescope to see small objects, respectfully declined to entertain the proposition, assigning the very substantial reason that such work was not congenial to his taste, and that his journalistic duties were, by preference, of a non-partisan character, and that he needed all of his office room for the publication of his own journal.

Mr. Woodson then left the office, and the Inquirer bird came down from his perch on the top of a transom, and fell to wondering how such things could be. As a mere news item the above might prove unimportant; but viewed in the light of many recent events, it is most significant. The Inquirer had no bones before the Congressional nomination, in charging the Owensboro Messenger with being secretly hostile to Mr. Ellis, while avowing loyal friendship for him. Even since the nomination, the friends of Mr. Ellis have found cause to share The Inquirer's views. To all it has been patent that some change had come over the spirit and the letter of the Messenger's dream, and this item is by no means the first time that the subject of traitorism in the Democratic camp has been coupled with that of the Messenger and its editor.

Why is Mr. Woodson, the Chairman of the District Democratic committee, discovered interesting himself in establishing a Republican paper to be run in the interest of a Republican opponent of Mr. Ellis, the Democratic nominee? By what means has he become so thoroughly advised as to the details of the scheme? How is he prepared to secure Mr. Benson the position if he would accept it, so as to relieve Mr. Woodson's office of the sponsorship?

Is not Mr. Woodson's connection with the scheme reprehensible in any light? Are loyal Democrats to be found secretly supplying the editor's department of the enemy's camp? Is there any occasion for Mr. Woodson to be secretly interested in perfecting the details of the publication of a Republican paper to be run in the interest of the Republican nominee until after the election?

Besides, Mr. Benson's mechanical facilities already necessitate his printing the Rural Home Journal on the Messenger press, and the reasons which prompted Mr. Woodson to seek his assistance could not be assigned to purely business expediency. Mr. Benson is a dignified, reserved and able journalist, but of limited acquaintance in Owensboro. He is an assiduous worker, and possesses both editorial and business tact. He would prove a valuable man for Mr. Woodson's purpose, save for his repugnance to any sort of underhanded methods.

The Messenger has been strenuous in its assertions of the danger that menaced the Democratic ticket in the Second district through Dr. Kimbley's candidacy. It has in so many words avowed that a full Republican vote for Dr. Kimbley would at this time insure his election. It is this which makes the presence of Mr. Woodson, Chairman of the Second District Democratic committee, in the enemy's camp, anomalous, to say the least of it.

The above information will serve to confirm an already prevalent opinion that much of the disaster that has heretofore overtaken the Democratic party in the county of Davies has been due to the self-assumed leadership of Mr. Woodson. For many years Davies county stood as the Gibraltar of Democracy in Western Kentucky. It has only been in recent years, when her old time Democrats and sturdy yeomanry, who have fought the good fight in times past, have seen their interests adversely purloined, that the event of Democratic defeat became possible. It seems that there is a traitor in the Democratic camp—Owensboro Inquirer.

A Lucky Youth and His Fortune.

A quiet wedding at St. Luke's church, San Francisco, Cal., last week disposed of the pretty young heiress, Florence Blythe, and of her fortune of something over $400,000. The groom was Fritz G. Henckley, a young insurance man of that city.

There was a spice of romance about the affair. Florence is not of age. Her guardian and grandmother, Mrs. Perry, opposed the match, and secrecy was observed to avoid a scene. The couple at once left for Southern California to spend their honeymoon. Florence Blythe got possession of the estate left by her bachelor father, Thomas H. Blythe, after a sensational contest of nearly two years, defeating full 100 other claimants. Her mother was a poor shop-keeper's daughter, whom the reprobate old millionaire met in London.

A Sporting Person.

Rev. J. W. Arney, of Detroit, Mich., who made a reputation because he raced horses during the week and preached rattling good sermons on Sundays, and who was thrown out of the Methodist church for it, is going back to the pulpit. He, however, will race the season out, having won six first prizes in the Greenville meet and lowered Guarantee's record to 2:20. Last week he met Monte Patience and Tillie S. to Manatee parties for $1,200 each, with permission to fill out the season with them. He leaves the track and sulky in two weeks, just in time to ask Conference for a pulpit.

Two Babies With One Body.

In the little town of Aspen, Colorado, last week there were born to the wife of John Hughes a second edition of the Siamese twins, differing only in the manner in which they were joined together, these being face to face. The children are two well-formed boys, weighing sixteen pounds, with well-developed heads, arms and legs, but with one body. The mother is 23 years of age and weighs but 100 pounds. She has been married four years and has one child. The freak has caused a great amount of interest among the medical fraternity.

Louisville Suspects Acquitted.

The examining trial of Vincent Spangler and Mrs. Cole was held Thursday week in Louisville, and resulted in their acquittal. The accused were charged with poisoning Mrs. Austin and Mrs. Pherrill, the two women who died so mysteriously a few weeks ago. It was shown by the evidence of the chemist that the women had died from poison, but the prosecution failed to present any evidence directly connecting the prisoners with the crime.

Wickedness of the Force Bill.

Republican journals, with violence of temper, denounce the Democratic candidate for Vice President for speaking against the doctrine of the Force bill in the Southern States. They say that Mr. Stevenson goes "bawling" through the South. They complain because he declares that the Force bill means "carpet-bag domination and misrule," and that it is "totally destructive of local government," "a daring attempt to weaken the power of the people," "a monstrous measure, devised in the spirit of hate," etc. The Force bill is all this.

Mr. Stevenson's picture of it is a true one. The Republican leaders themselves know it is not overdrawn. The purpose of the projectors of the Force bill in the Fifty-first Congress was to annul local control of the election, and give Federal officials, supported by military force, charge of the ballot-boxes and voting.

The plea that the bill was an innocent measure is childish. The most puerile defense of it we have seen is in the words of a Republican contemporary following: "What was the so-called Force bill which Mr. Stevenson characterizes in such savage terms? Briefly, it provided that when a certain number of voters in any Congressional district should formally represent that a free ballot was denied by the local authorities, and a fair election was possible only under Federal supervision, their petition for Federal control of the election machinery would be granted. It did not propose to interfere with State or purely local elections, but related solely to elections in which the entire country is directly interested."

What a proposition! A fair election "only possible under Federal supervision!" The purpose of the bill was, first, to carry on fraudulent elections, and, second, to engraft a doctrine subversive to our successful system of government. There is no such thing as a Federal election, and there is no constitutional warrant for the Government of the United States taking charge of the election of Representatives in Congress or Electors of President and Vice President.

Mr. Lodge, the author of the Force bill as it passed the House, is notoriously an extreme Hamiltonian. He is in favor of the enlargement and assertion of Federal power. He believes the States should be actually subordinate to the General Government. He goes much further than those who admit that the relations between the States and the General Government have been changed by the results of the civil war. He wants the States completely subordinated, and that was the spirit in which he introduced his bill.

Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, who was the champion of the bill in the Senate, is another centralizer. Both Mr. Hoar and Mr. Lodge were working on lines laid down by Mr. Harrison, and they went to such extremes as to offend not only Democrats, but to displease a great many people in the Republican party.

Hence the President's "hedging" in his letter of acceptance.

A Republican Congress, however, means the passage of another Force bill, and if this unfortunate situation should present itself, and Mr. Harrison should be re-elected to the Presidential office, the Force bill will become a law.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Found Under a Hoge Tree.

R. Lunceford, a son-in-law of George F. Chapman, of Louisa, Ky., was murdered and $500 taken from his person. Mr. Lunceford was on his way home, and it is supposed that he was assassinated near a huge tree where his mutilated body was found by neighbors. He was shot twice—through the heart and in the neck. Several parties have been arrested, but all were found innocent and discharged. The murderer will be roughly dealt with if he is caught.

We are authorized to announce Judge HENRY C. LILLY as a candidate for Circuit Judge in the Twenty-third Judicial district, composed of the counties of Estill, Lee, Wolfe, Breathitt and Magoffin.

For Appellate Judge.
We are authorized to announce Judge W. H. HOLT as a candidate for re-election as Judge of the Court of Appeals at the November election, 1892.

READ The date just after your name, on the margin of this paper, and if in arrears, send us $1 at once to renew, otherwise your name will be dropped from the list. All who are in arrears on the first day of October must be dropped in self-defense.

SOME time ago, in speaking of the announcement of Judge Lilly as a candidate for re-election, we used the expression, "his record is in his favor but his politics against him." Since that time we have taken some pains to get at the facts in the case, and the result is that his record is even worse than his politics. That Hon. D. B. Redwine will defeat Mr. Lilly in this Judicial district is now a foregone conclusion, for the people will no longer stand the wanton waste of Judge Lilly's administration. The facts we present are indisputable, and every tax payer, be he ever so partisan in his politics, can see at a glance that the profligacy of Judge Lilly's policy if persisted in would soon make paupers of us indeed. Mr. Redwine is a pure man in his morals, never drinks, and is at all times clear-headed. He is a young man of legal ability and sufficient ambition to spur him on to make us a good judge, and there is every reason to believe that in a given time he would dispose of three times as many cases as would Judge Lilly. Little the charge has been made that Mr. Redwine is a young man. True enough, and it is to the interest of the good people of the district that he is, for he will at all times be wide awake. All people of common sense know that a well-matured young man is far more capable than the gray-haired man who has spent his best days in dissipation, be that dissipation ever so slight of degree. Then, again, as to the legal ability of the two. Lawyers of unbiased views tell us that Mr. Redwine is the peer of the presiding judge in legal lore, and when it comes to expedition can give our gray-haired friend points and beat him. In proof of this they cite the fact that out of 600 cases tried before Mr. Redwine, as special judge of the Breathitt Circuit court not one has been reversed. In the same breath they hold up to view Con Cable's case in this county, only recently reversed, and name other notorious instances of Judge Lilly's incompetency. Now, as to Judge Lilly's ability to dispose of a docket, we submit a few facts that will show him to be a back number and not "in it" when expedition is a consideration. When Judge Lilly came into office but 84 Common Pleas cases appeared on the Wolfe Circuit Court docket but today it is encumbered with 337 cases, and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that the Common Pleas court relieved him of the cognizance of civil cases. While we are not yet done with Judge Lilly's record and reversion in office, we will content ourselves for the present with submitting the following extract from Gov. Brown's message, which we commend to the careful consideration of the voters in this Circuit Court district. Read it and reflect:

There is an amazing difference, that has existed for years, and is yet sustained, in the expenses incurred in the several Judicial districts of the State for criminal prosecutions. In the Second Judicial district, Judge Greer presiding, the amount paid by the State therein for such prosecutions in 1891 was $7,017.21; in the Eleventh district, Judge Monfort presiding, amount paid $4,133.32; in the Twelfth district, Judge Arthur presiding, amount paid $6,554.03; in the Fourteenth district, Judge Cole presiding, $4,887.00; " " " in the Nineteenth district, Judge Lilly presiding, $10,620.37. The attention of the General Assembly is invited to a consideration of the sharp contrasts appearing in these expenses, and to an investigation of the causes thereof, with the hope expressed that some remedy may be found to curtail evident extravagance.

In round numbers it cost $8,000 more for criminal prosecutions in our district than in any other one cited, and this of itself should convince all friends of economic government that the election of Judge Lilly again is an expensive luxury that we would do well to eliminate from our Judicial bill of fare, and we'll do it.

With this issue appears the announcement of Judge W. H. Holt for re-election as Judge of the Court of Appeals at the November election, 1892. Judge Holt is too well known to the people of this section to need an introduction from us, so we dispense with that formality. That Judge Holt is a Republican in his politics is also well known, though his announcement does not mention the fact, and it is evident that he hopes to get Democratic votes to enable him to reach his election. We announce him simply in a business way, and have nothing to say as to who shall, or shall not, vote for him. This, however, we can say in justice to the man. He is morally and intellectually the peer of any man, learned in law, just as a jurist, and numbers in his list of personal friends many good Democrats. But, whether they will support him remains to be seen. Democrats seldom scratch.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Washington by its hospitable reception and entertainment of the members of the G. A. R. and the friends and relatives who accompanied them to the successful National encampment just closed, sent out $30,000 advertisements, in the persons of the delighted visitors, whose talk will forever put an end to the supposition which has been forward in some quarters that the citizens of the National capital were selfish, inhospitable and lacking in public spirit, and that the city can not take care of a big crowd. The encampment was in every respect the greatest ever held by the G. A. R. As to the treatment accorded to the old soldiers and those who came to see the largest parade since the disbandment of the army at the close of the war, let them speak when they return to their homes.

It is only by sitting or standing for more than seven hours, as nearly half a million did, to see this memorable parade pass, that a real conception can be obtained of what a parade of 80,000 men means. Those who went to see the parade under the impression that in an hour or so it would grow monotonous and tiresome, remained to the end, and not a few of them were ex-Confederates from the adjoining States of Maryland and Virginia. No man or woman could think what these 80,000 men represented without feeling interested. Bystanders were constantly pointing out some man in the parade whose name was widely known; ex-President Hayes marched on foot with the Ohio post, which he belongs to; C. J. Davis, of "he pays the freight" fame, rode at the head of the famous 6th Massachusetts regiment of which he was Colonel; and B. F. Butler rode in a carriage in the center of the Massachusetts post named in his honor, and so it was all through, the interest never flagged.

It is creditable to all concerned that politics have been kept out of the G. A. R. encampment. It is not meant by this statement that no politics have been privately talked; that would be too much to expect in the midst of a Presidential campaign, but that politics have been kept out of all the reunions and other meetings held in connection with the encampment and that just as much honor has been accorded to Gen. Rosecrans—"Old Rosy" the veterans call him—a staunch Democrat, as to any of the Republican members of the organization, while Gen. Butler, who says he has not been for years in accord with any political party, also received his full share of attention.

By no means the least pleasing feature of the monster parade, which will be talked about for years to come by all who participated in or saw it, was the singing of 1,000 school children who were seated on a large stand at the north end of the treasury building, dressed in red, white and blue, and so arranged as to present at a distance the appearance of a mammoth American flag. It was a pleasure to see the faces of the veterans as they marched past, while the children sang with spirit the old favorite war songs and a song of welcome composed for the occasion. Gen. Schofield, the present Commander of the United States army, was so well pleased with the singing of the little ones, that after he reached the end of the line of parade he came back and occupied a seat in their midst until the end of the parade, and he joined right heartily in the choruses.

Those who anticipated higher prices for provisions during the encampment were most agreeably surprised, for by middle of the week prices of everything, except poultry and eggs, were a little lower than they had been a week before.

Washington not only entertained its well-to-do, but it took the best of care of those who were so unfortunate as to get sick while here, the citizens committee having had placed at its disposal before the visitors came a complete hospital fitted with all the most modern appliances for the treatment of emergency cases, a half dozen ambulances, and a full complement of volunteer physicians and nurses.

President and Mrs. Harrison are again in the White House, having returned to Washington from Lake Lake on Wednesday. And a most awful homecoming it was, too. Mrs. Harrison was taken from the special car in which she had made the trip on her bed, which was carried to the White House in an army ambulance, she being too weak to sit up at all. When she left Washington she was able to walk to and from her carriage supported by Mr. Harrison and her physician. That tells the whole story of her present condition. Since returning Mr. Harrison has spent most of his time by her bedside, and the look of anguish upon his face and upon those of the other members of the family tells all too plainly the fear they feel that the invalid has come home to die.

Charles W. Russell, the Republican nominee for Congress in this district, was in this week sparking the Third party.

How this world do move. Maud S. has got her trotters knuckled; Sullivan got his popularity bucked; the Republican party is plowing away; the Peoples party in trying to stretch over the United States has broke its pucker string and collapsed, and the editor of the Morgan Messenger poketh his nose away down into the political dust and just blows and blows and tries to cover up our nominee for Congress with backhites and discouragement, on account of which I submit the following for his scrap book:

I'm acquainted with a man
Who runs a local paper,
He has dropped his politics
And tries to cut a caper.

They say he is a Democrat,
In fact he told me so,
But he is not the kind I am
I want to tell you so.

He does not rightly represent
This Democratic section,
We'll vote for Lisle, the nominee,
At November's great election.

It is our only county paper,
And ought to be our organ,
But lacketh strength about its knees
For the Democrats of Morgan.

He flouts about the money
Of Old Kentucky's gifted son,
But the treble seems to be
That he was getting none.

I mean that Lisle, the nominee,
His paper did not patronize,
And this is what makes "Caraway"
Cold water spout and agonize.

But we hope he'll be all right
When the time to vote rolls 'round,
And never let his politics
Again be thought unsound.

Address SPENCER COOPER, Hazel Green, Ky.

Jimmie Day, of Bowen, is taking in the fair and visiting his parents.

Judge John E. Cooper was one of the distinguished visitors at our fair this week.

The fair this week presented some of the best racing that it has ever had on its program.

Hon. C. W. Russell, Republican candidate for Congress, attended our fair this week.

Charles Swango won a race Tuesday with "Sleazy Jim," a lively horse from Frankfort.

Among the visitors from Powell county, was noticed George Lisle, Sr., and George Lisle, Jr.

Mr. J. B. Polk, of Frankfort (now Miss Sue Godsey), is visiting friends here and attending the fair.

While there has been far too much pistol-pulling at the fair this week, there has been no one hurt so far.

Judge Holt, Republican candidate for reelection to the Appellate bench, was a visitor at our fair this week.

Thos. C. Easterling, of Washington, formerly of this office, is the guest of the editor and his better half this week.

The list of premiums awarded at our fair this week will appear in next issue. It was not furnished us for this issue.

J. C. Maasheimer, representing the Blue Grass Tobacco Co., and B. H. Ryan, with Pearson & Clark, Lexington, attended our fair.

Look at the date after your name on the margin of this paper, and if you are behind, next week bring us the dollar you owe us. We need it.

Hon. M. C. Lisle, Democratic candidate for Congress, honored our fair with his presence this week, and seems sanguine of success in his race against Mr. Russell.

We find it impossible to give a list of the guests of the Day House this week, owing to limited space, but for the same reason omit mention of very many prominent persons.

Judge Kinser and M. M. Redwine, respective candidates for Circuit Judge and Commonwealth's Attorney, were attending our fair. They belong in Judge Cooper's old district.

Why isn't this a good thing? Dr. Fenner's Kidney and Backache Cure is warranted to give satisfaction in every case or money returned. Such a proposition couldn't be thought of if the medicine wasn't superior to all others. For sale by Rose & Jones.

Hon. D. B. Redwine, Democratic candidate for Judge in this Judicial district, was a prominent figure among the distinguished visitors at our fair this week, and politicians of both parties think he will win the race against Judge Lilly hands down, as race horse men say.

The Hazel Green fair opened Tuesday in a blaze of glory, with the celebrated colored brass band of Georgetown in the amphitheater and a fair crowd in the amphitheater. The first day was devoted to cattle, hogs, sheep, etc., with a trotting race, a mile race and a pony race for the afternoon entertainment. The floral ball was held at 8 o'clock and the award of premiums on the first day. The second day was devoted to horse and jack stock in the forenoon and several good races in the afternoon. The premiums awarded will appear in the next issue.

On yesterday (Sunday) Mrs. C. C. Hanks and her daughter, Mrs. Kelly Fulka, drove out to John Tyler's, about a mile from town, and had only driven a few yards on their return home when their horse became frightened at the noise of the buggy running over a bridge and started to run, when they attempted to rein him against the fence. The buggy struck the fence and threw Mrs. Hanks and the little babe of Mrs. Fulka out. The buggy ran over Mrs. Hanks and bruised her up considerably, bruising her head and crushing her side very badly, possibly breaking some of her ribs. Under the treatment of Drs. Stamper and Tutt she is getting along very nicely, and it is hoped that she will soon recover. The little babe escaped with only a little scratch on the side of the face. Mrs. Fulka held on to the buggy until the horse ran about fifty yards after Mrs. Hanks fell out, when the buggy ran over a side and struck an apple tree throwing her out and, strange to say, unhurt. Women should be more careful when driving alone.

S. S. Combs and M. H. Courtney took a pleasure trip to the woods the other day, and after looking over some timber land for two or three hours started for home across the mountain and when they reached the top they concluded that they had missed their route and were completely lost, Mr. Combs saying that they were on Stillwater. They at last went down to the county road about a mile and a half from town and Mr. Combs still did not know where he was. Seeing the house of Robert Tyler a short distance away, Mr. Combs said to Mike: "Hold on till I go down to this house; I can find out where we are," and going down to the house called Mr. Tyler out. As Bob came out he realized where he was, and being ashamed he told him that if any one came along inquiring for him to tell him that he would be riding along toward town.

THE HAPPIEST TIME.

Whenever life's song is lost to rhyme
And fate and my plans won't thrive,
Then I live to muse on that happy time,
The time when I was alive.

Those dear old days: They haunt me yet
With dreams of content and bliss,
When there wasn't a hurt I couldn't possibly get,
Nor a joy I could lose or miss.

When I met the years and the ages flee
In the most unaccounted way,
And never looked in the glass to see
If my hair were growing gray.

They may praise of the wondrous things that are,
Which experience alone can give,
But I know that my happiest days, by far,
Were the days when I didn't live.

Nor would I compare the pleasures shown
In the present's trifling scenes,
With the endless rapture that those were
The times that have never been.

What wonder that still I love to speak
Of this kingdom grand and free,
That vanished away at the first wild shriek
Of the infant known as me?

I don't want a job how fortune flows
To the men on each side of me,
For the fellow I envy the most are those
Who have not begun to live.

AN INNOCENT PRISONER.

How the Widow Peeler Lodged the Banks' Boarder.

THREE young ladies, a so-called Mr. Wimpey, dropping his book of fashions into a basket, said: "And all coming here? Dear me, what are you going to do with them?"

"That's just what we were considering," said Miss Araminta Banks, "and with engraving sweetness. If you wouldn't mind going down to the widow Peeler's just for a night or two, Mr. Wimpey, and let the young ladies have your room—only a temporary matter, of course—it would be such an accommodation."

Mr. Origen Wimpey was probably the most bashful young man at Spruce Mountain. He was just married, with a pale complexion, very light-blue eyes and a scanty growth of lemon-colored down beginning to ornament his chin and upper lip. He liked seclusion and courtesy, the solitary of Spruce Mountain, because there was no one else there and no possibility of anyone else being admitted, as he himself accepted the only spare chamber, under the eaves of the house, where he looked out on the balmy growth of the mountain side, and beneath which a little river roared and gurgled and beat itself into a spray of white foam against the cliffs of the rocks.

So that, toward the mid-point of the golden July, when three of Miss Araminta's schoolmates wrote her a much-scented pink note that they would arrive by mountain stage that very evening, to spend a week, there was a natural connection at the farmhouse. For the Banks family, be it remembered, did not live on a city avenue, where one can send out and buy a foaming-hothead or a cynoscent out at a moment's notice.

"What shall we do?" said Mrs. Banks. "Why, couldn't they have let us know in time so that we could have asked them to postpone their visit a few weeks?"

"Oh, that would be very inhospitable," said Miss Araminta, with the air of superiority natural to one who has been educated in boarding-school. "I'll tell you what we'll do. We'll ask Mr. Wimpey to sleep a few nights down at the widow Peeler's. She has got a spare bedroom, and I'm sure he'll make no objection. He's a good-natured," said Mrs. Banks.

"Oh, as you mind," said Araminta. The young lady was right. Mr. Wimpey was only too glad to escape, at all and any hazards, from the awful invasion of three girls from the city. He did not mind Miss Araminta, for he was used to her ways, and knew that she was safely engaged to the young man who kept the general store at Spruce Mountain, ten or twelve miles below. And Mrs. Banks was a fat, motherly woman, who made catnip tea for his colds and got up special little dishes for his delectation, whenever he showed any signs of a failing appetite. But three young women who would perhaps make eyes at him, ask him gushing questions, quote poetry, and demand his opinion concerning Kensington stilet and are needle-work, this vague possibility made Mr. Origen Wimpey's blood run cold.

In the widow Peeler a young woman, Mr. Wimpey felt strangely at ease. "Oh, bless your heart!" said Miss Araminta, fathoming his motives.

"She's five-and-sixty, and a little hard of hearing into the bargain. But I'm sure she'll make you very comfortable, and it will be such a favor to us."

And so, with the fall of dewy eve, Mr. Wimpey packed a very small handbag, and armed with many instructions as to the finding of his way from Mr. and Mrs. Banks, set forth to the residence of the widow Peeler, which residence was said to be on a cross-road half a mile from every possible point of the compass. It rained a little, and the soft wreathe of fragrant mist were rising off the mountain-side; but Mr. Wimpey, being in one of his peculiar moods, heeded not these insignificant drawbacks and plodded bravely on.

The three Misses Merivale arrived, as they had given notice, by the evening stage, and they were sorely disappointed when they learned that the boarder had taken wings, for, in truth and in fact, one reason of the Misses Merivale's desire to visit their dear friends and schoolmate, Araminta Banks, was that they had heard that a city young gentleman was domiciled there for the season.

"Dear me!" said Miss Merivale. "What a pity to disturb your boarder!" "I declare," snapped Ermengarde, the second sister, "I feel quite conscience-stricken!"

"Couldn't you have put us in any corner, so as not to turn him up?" pleaded Daisy, the youngest, a dimpled hoyden of twenty-old summers.

"At all events," proposed Maud, "we certainly ought to go down, en masse, and apologize to him. What do you say, girls?"

"Oh, I don't think he'd like it," said Miss Araminta. "He's so dreadfully bashful!"

"Nonsense," gayly cried Ermengarde. "He won't mind us. Let's go!" "And let's go!" cried Daisy. "And it's such a lovely morning!"

And Araminta Banks, finding herself in a decided minority, had nothing for it but to obey the voice of popular female opinion.

"I hope he'll go out fishing," she said to herself, with some natural vindictive satisfaction. "It's the best place of unsocial-hunting I ever saw." Those two pale girls really do show their cards a little too plainly.

And what, all this time, had been the adventures of Mr. Origen Wimpey? He had succeeded at last in finding the packet-roof farmhouse at which, "alone and without any other company," as old Chaucer sings, the widow Peeler was sitting by the light of one solitary candle, with her cast-iron-boiled feet carefully balanced on the stove hearth, reading the "horrible accounts" in the weekly paper, and was deeply interested, just when Mr. Wimpey's knock sounded, in an account of a bold and daring bank burglary, which he had recently perpetrated in the nearest city.

"The villain who committed this diabolical crime is supposed to be in hiding in or near Spruce Mountain," she said to herself, with intense selfishness and an occasional mispronunciation of the big words, "but will soon be swooped down upon by the majesty of an offended law."

"Oh! What! Didn't I hear some one knock at the door?"

And, providing herself with a poker, she ventured to nudge the door with some caution. There stood a pale young man with a satinel. A most unexpected vision, for the traveling peddler, who had been intrusted with a note to her from Mrs. Banks, had forgotten all about it and gone placidly by, with an half-sheet of paper at the bottom of his pockets.

The widow Peeler grew pale, remembering the enigmatic paragraph she had so lately been perusing. The bag was small, but there was nothing to hinder its containing dynamite; the gun case and fishing poles, for all she knew, might be deadly instruments of destruction.

"Who be you?" demanded the widow. "I am the Banks' boarder," explained Mr. Wimpey, in an insinuating a manner as possible. "Will you kindly give me refuge for—"

"Refuge?" screamed the widow. "The bank burglar! Well, if ever I saw such hardened impudence in all my life!"

And with an energy and strength which afterward seemed, as she told Mrs. Deacon Glassey, positively superhuman, she seized him by the collar, dragged him into the little back room where the seed corn was being piled up, and succeeded in locking and bolting the door upon him before he had time to utter a word.

"The bank burglar!" said Mrs. Deacon Glassey, positively superhuman, she seized him by the collar, dragged him into the little back room where the seed corn was being piled up, and succeeded in locking and bolting the door upon him before he had time to utter a word.

"The window is nailed up," said Mrs. Peeler, piling all the heavy furniture against the door, "and I'll go to Sarah Jennings and send her husband off for the constables at once."

But Mr. Jennings was in bed with rheumatism, and Sarah easily persuaded the widow that her captive would be safe enough all night in the little room.

"And tomorrow," said she, "we'll send over to Miss Heers, and she'll get the constables!"

This was the condition of things when the three Misses Merivale and Araminta Banks came in the next morning, on pretense of bringing some black currant jelly for Mrs. Peeler's cold, and gathering wild grapes in the woods. The widow, being chronically deaf, paid attention to the greeting and introductions of Araminta, but waved her bonnet in the air, crying out breathlessly:

"Gals, I've got him!"

"What wonder?" cried Araminta and the three Misses Merivale in chorus.

"The bank burglar!" stammered Mrs. Peeler. "And Miss Heers has gone for the constables, and there is a reward of five hundred dollars offered, and if you'll be very careful you can just climb on the wood-pile and peep through the outside slats of the window, to see him!"

Cautiously, and with many little shrieks of apprehension, Miss Daisy Merivale and Araminta Banks ascended the wood-pile.

"Oh, I don't think he'd like it," said Miss Araminta. "He's so dreadfully bashful!"

"Nonsense," gayly cried Ermengarde. "He won't mind us. Let's go!" "And let's go!" cried Daisy. "And it's such a lovely morning!"

"I hope he'll go out fishing," she said to herself, with some natural vindictive satisfaction. "It's the best place of unsocial-hunting I ever saw." Those two pale girls really do show their cards a little too plainly.

And what, all this time, had been the adventures of Mr. Origen Wimpey? He had succeeded at last in finding the packet-roof farmhouse at which, "alone and without any other company," as old Chaucer sings, the widow Peeler was sitting by the light of one solitary candle, with her cast-iron-boiled feet carefully balanced on the stove hearth, reading the "horrible accounts" in the weekly paper, and was deeply interested, just when Mr. Wimpey's knock sounded, in an account of a bold and daring bank burglary, which he had recently perpetrated in the nearest city.

"The villain who committed this diabolical crime is supposed to be in hiding in or near Spruce Mountain," she said to herself, with intense selfishness and an occasional mispronunciation of the big words, "but will soon be swooped down upon by the majesty of an offended law."

"Oh! What! Didn't I hear some one knock at the door?"

And, providing herself with a poker, she ventured to nudge the door with some caution. There stood a pale young man with a satinel. A most unexpected vision, for the traveling peddler, who had been intrusted with a note to her from Mrs. Banks, had forgotten all about it and gone placidly by, with an half-sheet of paper at the bottom of his pockets.

The widow Peeler grew pale, remembering the enigmatic paragraph she had so lately been perusing. The bag was small, but there was nothing to hinder its containing dynamite; the gun case and fishing poles, for all she knew, might be deadly instruments of destruction.

"Who be you?" demanded the widow. "I am the Banks' boarder," explained Mr. Wimpey, in an insinuating a manner as possible. "Will you kindly give me refuge for—"

"Refuge?" screamed the widow. "The bank burglar! Well, if ever I saw such hardened impudence in all my life!"

And with an energy and strength which afterward seemed, as she told Mrs. Deacon Glassey, positively superhuman, she seized him by the collar, dragged him into the little back room where the seed corn was being piled up, and succeeded in locking and bolting the door upon him before he had time to utter a word.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

FOR SWEET POTATOES.

A Storehouse That Will Pay for Itself in a Single Season.

In 1890 I commenced to grow sweet potato plants and potatoes. I had to send to Cincinnati for seed. As seed is the spring was always dear. I tried to save my own seed. I tried in various ways, packing them in boxes and barrels, some in sand, some in sawdust and shavings, but had no success. Some would heat and some would chill, could not keep them upon the right temperature, so I concluded to build a potato house for keeping sweet potatoes for seed.

I built a house 12x16 feet, setting it up off the ground the same as a corn crib, to keep the rats and mice out, and to have a circulation of air under it. I built it double. I used 2x4 studs for the sides, using matched flooring for the floor.

The first siding I used was 1x4, set on a nail on some 2x4 studs, and on the inside shingling 1x4, set on a nail on some 2x4 studs, making the sides about 10 inches thick. I also made a double floor, floored both sides of the joists and filled in between with matched flooring 2x4 inches.

Overhead I used 1x4 boards, over this I laid sawdust 6 inches thick, before the roof was put on. When done, I had a house that was warm, moist and light. I put a window at each end near the ceiling.

SWEET POTATO STOREHOUSE.

With sliding sash. Also a vent hole up through the roof, with a slide at the bottom to regulate the draft. This was a box 16 inches square, with a cap on the top to keep out the rain. The house was the same as the sides and fitted tight.

Inside of this house I built a bin 2 1/2 feet from the floor and the size of the bin, lacking 4 feet space around the bin, leaving 1 foot space along the front of the door. This gives room to get around the bin. The sides of the bin are movable, to accommodate the depth to the amount of potatoes to be put in.

After the potatoes are all in the bin, I let them sweat awhile, and to help dry them out, I put two lighted lamps (kerosene lamps, such as they use in stoves for coal). These I put under the bin and let them stay eight or ten days, shifting their position every day; then I take them from under the bin and put them in the corner of the house, one with mesquite settler upon this I put three inches of sawdust or straw. This is left on until the potatoes are taken out in the spring.

I hang a thermometer inside, on a level with the top of the bin, changing its position to watch the temperature and keep it even. The temperature must be kept at 45 degrees, as near as possible. If it is below 45 degrees, below 40 degrees, or above 50 degrees, if the room gets too warm, put out a lamp; if too cold, add another lamp. It is very easy to regulate the temperature with kerosene lamps in every case, so as to be safe in case of accident. The lamps I trim and fill night and morning. There is no sitting up nights to fire up the largest-sized lamps but all night.

Since I adopted this plan I have lost only about 10 per cent, in rot and shrinkage; mostly shrinkage. I tried many ways before I hit upon this plan. The main thing is to have a dry room and even temperature. When it is very cold outside I shut the room up tight. A bin in a room this size will hold from 150 to 200 bushels. I sure the medium-sized potatoes for seed and sell the largest—Farm and Fireside.

A Rat-Proof Iron House. The rats go in and out of my corn house regularly, but rats cannot. This house was built in the ordinary way, except that the plank were nailed on the inner side of the sills between the sleepers on the sides and the outer sleepers laid to touch the end sills. The spaces thus made were filled even full with mortar mixed with irons, bits of wood and cylinder shells. The floor was then laid to extend out even with the weather boarding. The house was left open and the rats for ventilation. I soon found that the rats climbed upon the sides of the house and went in under the eaves. To remedy this I nailed a strip of zinc eight inches wide all around the house, over the door and about a foot lower than the opening under the eaves. This stopped the rats effectively.—J. B. Donovan, in N. E. Homestead.

STOCK-LICE REMEDY.

Preparation and Application of an Excellent Mixture.

There is a remedy likely to be generally adopted as soon as its merits and the best methods of preparation and application are known. It may be prepared according to the following formula: In two quarts of boiling water, dissolve one-fourth pound of good hard soap, remove from the fire, immediately add one pint of kerosene and agitate the mixture violently by running it through a straining pump with a small nozzle back into the original vessel. In three to five minutes the liquid becomes creamy, and if perfectly made no free kerosene will rise to the surface when it is allowed to stand a few minutes.

This free kerosene, if present, is a disadvantage, as when applied to stock it removes the hair, and when applied to plants it kills the foliage.

Of course the quantity of the respective ingredients mentioned in the formula may be multiplied by any number, to make enough emulsion for the work required, or to have a supply left on hand for future use. The proportions given are such that one-half, or thirty per cent, of the mixture by volume is kerosene (disregarding the soap, which adds very little to the volume). Before using, this must be used in a straining pump. Apply by means of a sponge.

It is instant death to the lice, and does not injure the hair at all. A quart is sufficient to treat a horse, as it penetrates to the skin very rapidly. Thus the cost of material sinks about out of sight, being nearly three-tenths of a cent for a horse and probably not over one-tenth of a cent for a calf. Almost any spraying pump will make the emulsion. In this connection it is worth while to urge the use of kerosene emulsion for other insects. No more convenient or effective way can be devised to renovate an old horsehouse than to spray the whole inside thoroughly with one part of emulsion to twenty of water. The machine will reach all the cracks.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Who knows the value of a hen as an insect destroyer?

Turkeys are tender until the feathers are well started.

White turkeys always have a lively look in the poultry yard.

There is no better absorbent for the poultry house than plaster.

Chickens of the guinea fowls away hawks and saves the chicks.

As a mother and mother of gravel makes long and unhealthy chickens.

Feed the chickens early. It is the bird's nature to rise and eat early.

Don't overtax the hen by making her hatch twice in one season.

Conserve clover in bags, as it is the new feed in market for poultry.

Kerosene oil rightly applied to the henhouse will send the lice to their long home.

A busy poultry of fat-producing fowls is the most growing bird or animal on hand.

Overfeeding is one of the reasons that are given for hens laying soft-shelled eggs.

If size and hardness is desired in the flock, feed from only the best and most thrifty.

A good layer and breeder may be kept with profit for four years; but the ordinary are best sold early.—American Farmer.

BLUE GRASS SEED.

Description of a Tool Designed for Gathering the Crop.

The hand tool shown in the illustration, Fig. 1, is used largely in Kentucky for gathering blue grass seed. The implement is held in one hand and swung so the teeth forming the bottom will catch the heads of grass. By this means the seed is stripped off, and remains in the box, and when full it is emptied into a sack or bin.

Fig. 2 shows the bottom on a larger scale. The teeth should be of steel and fastened with screws. After the seed is gathered it is placed in a sack, and then, after which the chaff is removed with a flat, tramping or some such method. Or the seed may be placed on a scaffold, exposed to sun and rain, which will cause the chaff to be more easily separated. Where only a small quantity of seed is wanted the blue grass may be moved with a scythe or mowing machine and given the same treatment as noted above.—Orange Judd Farmer.

BLUE GRASS GATHERER.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

Hulled Beets: Cut off leaves, wash well and boil until tender; about two hours for young beets; then drop in a pan of cold water and slip off the skins with a knife. Do not allow them to become cold; slice and cut in thin squares, season with salt, pepper, melted butter and a little vinegar, if preferred.—Housekeeper.

French Salad Dressing: Take one teaspoonful of olive oil, one teaspoonful of salad oil or the same quantity of fresh butter; a pinch of mustard, one of salt and a tablespoonful of sugar. Let these simmer over the fire while you beat two eggs thoroughly. Then stir eggs into the other ingredients, taking care that they do not boil. It should present a smooth, velvety appearance.—Christian Inquirer.

Hop Yeast: To one quart of water, take a small handful of hops. Put them in a kettle and let them boil for ten minutes; then strain the water while boiling into a vessel very gradually over a pint of flour, so that there be no lumps. Stir it until it becomes a smooth paste, and add cold water in small quantities at a time, until it is as warm as fresh milk. Put in a teaspoonful of good yeast, and set it away until it rises. After it rises well, it will settle down: then it is fit to use.—Harper's Bazar.

Rice and Apple Sauce: Boil two tablespoonfuls of rice in a half pint of milk when soft add the yolks of two eggs, and sugar to sweeten; make a wall with it around the sides of the dish. Stir some pared and sliced apples until soft, fill up the apertures in the apples with red current jelly, pile them in the center of the dish, and cover the whole with the whites of two eggs beaten in stiff froth, and are very sweet, with white sugar. Brown in the oven, and serve with cream.—Good Housekeeping.

Pineapple Ice: Select two ripe pineapples, and to them allow a quart of clarified sugar and a lemon. Pare and slice the pineapples, and mix with the pulp of which there should be not less than a quart, through a sieve. A small quantity of the pineapple should be reserved to be finely sliced and added to the ice when half frozen. Stir the pineapple pulp into the clarified sugar and lemon juice, and freeze. When frozen, add the whites of two eggs which have been previously beaten to a frothy snow and mixed with four tablespoons of sugar, and freeze again, stirring thoroughly into the ice with a spatula, and set it away to harden.—Good Housekeeping.

COMBINATION COSTUMES.

Pretty Things Made Up of Plain and Striped Material.

Among the latest revived ideas is a combination costume made of plain and striped material, either all silk or wool, remade up together. An example of this is shown in a recent issue of SATURDAY MORNING. The dress is made in a bell skirt with a train and a very closely fitted waist, along outside garment is compromise between a jacket and a vest, and has plain square fronts, which extend two-thirds of the distance from waist-line to hem. The backs are shorter, covering only about one-half of the length of the skirt. A fine cord of the fabric is laced in front from waistline to a point about midway of the bust. From here, sections of the material in reverse fashion fall over the shoulders, turning back from a point midway between the neck and the collar; the sleeves are very full from shoulders to elbows, with this fitting the arm closely. This redolent bodice has the edges trimmed with a very fluffy trimming made of loops of silk, somewhat after the fashion of the old-time moss-trimming.

A similar model is shown in striped and plain suitting. This has a short skirt, and is intended for a very stylish evening dress.

A novelty is a bodice with draped sections from the sleeves across the front and back. These sections are gathered into a puff over the bust, form fluffy appendages to the shoulders, and are as flat as possible at the back; but this style is neither pretty nor becoming. It gives a suggestion of round shoulders, and is not at all symmetrical.

No costume is in good taste which has any special prominence over the shoulders. Such an arrangement at once destroys the graceful lines of a good figure, and makes a bad or indifferent one simply hideous. The most delicate should be preserved from the top of the shoulders down the back to the waist-line. Any attempt at this sort of trimming must be dispensed with the greatest care, or the effect of the most beautiful costume is easily marred.—N. Y. Ledger.

Ways of Cooking the Banana.

The banana is thought of not yet know how to use the banana. In the tropical climates, where the banana furnishes the principal article of diet, the inhabitants have found numerous methods of utilizing this delicious fruit, which render it at once nutritious and palatable. They boil it, they bake it, as we do sweet potatoes, they peel it, cut it in slices and fry it in a butter, they mash it into a paste and dry it in the sun, as we do apples and peaches. They make it into puddings, pies, comfits and preserves, and even smother it in sugar until it is a candied fruit. In every one of these ways it is both pleasant and the most wholesome as an article of food.—Toledo Blade.

Capitulating Vessels.

The recent capsizing of a vessel tied up to a pier in Brooklyn is sufficiently unusual in this port to excite comment. But it is common enough at ports along the Bay of Fundy and its tributary streams. The usual rise and fall of the tide along the bay is from forty to fifty feet and high tide sometimes exceeds six feet. With the fall of the tide all craft are left high, but by no means dry, with an area of chocolate-colored mud all about them. This mud is too shifting to hold a vessel in safety, so each pier is provided with one or more strong wood frames called shoes fixed at the bottom of the stream or bay. Upon these shoes all vessels rest at low tide. It frequently happens, however, that a vessel does not get her bows snugly on the shoe, and if a strong wind comes when she is thus ill balanced over she goes into the mud to be buried forty feet under the next rising tide.—N.
